Members of the Growth Fund's Red Willow LLC and Southern Ute Indian Tribal Councilmembers attended the christening of the semi-submersible floating production system, Delta House, Wednesday, July 9.

The Tribe became involved as a partner in the project early on in 2004 when it began funding the exploration of wells. "We funded 45 percent of the exploration for the wells." Bob Zahradnik, growth fund operating director said. "Red Willow was one of the founding partners that helped get it all started, we are part of the partnership that found the wells." Financially, the Delta House investment is expected to be a big gain for the Tribe. According to Zahradnik for fiscal year 2016 – the

Cat Creek fencing project

Big things are happening in the surrounding mountains of Cats Creek. The Cats Creek Range Unit has been working diligently on constructing a fence that will range over three-square miles and create a boundary for tribal and private land.

The project began conception late 2013, with plans of making the fence a reality by late summer.

"This project was brought to me last year," Doug Krueger, Range Technician for the Department of Natural Resources said. "By January of this year, we were able to have the project on the books and was able to survey the fencing area."

There are many factors that must be taken in account before any fence could be constructed, mostly with private and tribal land.

When tribal and private land borders each other a Part 1 of 3: Throughout its ongoing years providing service to the Southern Ute Indian Tribe, KSUT Public Radio has continued to expand its name into the homes of listeners. Over the next three issues, the Drum will be highlighting the history surrounding KSUT's origin as well as the station's plans for its foreseeable future. Tune in to KSUT Tribal Radio 91.3 FM in Ignacio (www.ksut.org) for ongoing broadcast of tribal related news, music, and information.

TRIBAL RADIO

The history of KSUT

By Damon Toledo
THE SOUTHERN UTE DRUM

Since it's official launch in 1976, KSUT Public Radio has been a staple in distributing tribal news to the Southern Ute Indian Tribe, spreading multicultural awareness to listeners, and inspiring cultural common ground within the surrounding communities of the reservation. The history and leadership surrounding KSUT's establishment has led the station to become one of the most acknowledged Native American radio stations in the United States.

The idea of KSUT was first brought forward in 1974 during an exchange between late Chairman, Leonard C. Burch, and Eddie Box Sr., KSUT's original director. The discussion involved developing a cultural institution that would provide local and national programming and community engagement to the Southern Ute Indian Tribe. This became the driving force behind KSUT, and soon the idea of having a station that would deliver weekly hour-long radio broadcasts to tribal members in the Ute language was becoming a reality.

Tribal elder, Eddie Box Jr., has served KSUT for 37 years, 28 of those as board president. He described the work process during an era where Internet use wasn't an option.

"We were such a small station at the time," he said. "Back then, people would hand carry their news to our main office. Most of the news pertained to Southern Ute tribal members.

Erwin Taylor, tribal elder and one of KSUT's original directors of the board, reflected on the expansion of KSUT and how communication with the public is crucial for a growing community.

"I served with KSUT for six years," he said. "We were leaders in Indian land because we had visions with what [KSUT] would do for the public – address education, discuss native topics, and get grants to help our people ... everyone worked equally to better the communication of the tribe and to keep our traditional ways going through history."

KSUT had it's first broadcast in June 1976. Complete with a 10-watt broadcasting signal, a mix of tribal news, messages, and music became available for all local listeners. At the time of its establishment, the station was one of only eight Native Amer-surveyor must come out and mark the land accordingly explained Krueger. Once staked, an Archeologist can find places of cultural significance, which can make a detour around the culturally sensitive area, he said.

Wild life is another big factor, which can happen building any fence.

"This fence has something we have never done before," Krueger said. "We have decided to use a lay-down fence for this project."

A lay-down fence allows for animals to have an easier and safer migration through the winter as well as reduced damage to the fence from snow.

"This allows the fence to have reduced damage and have a longer life," he said.

Over three quarters of a mile will have the fence incorporated, with tribal land on both sides of the fence.

"We would never put a lay-down fence if it was a boundary to private land," explained Kruger. "It's just something we would never do."

Other departments and divisions have been included into the project such as the Wood Yard, which takes away any wood that has been cut uses it for firewood for the membership.

For the project the Range Division teamed up with

Much of the fence is completed; any uncompleted fencing will be finished within two months.

Zohnnie Construction Industries Inc. out of Farmington, N.M. to help get the fence up on schedule. Zohnnie Construction Inc. is a Native American-female-owned business.

"This is our first project we have ever done with Doug and the Range Division," said Richard Phelps, manager at Zohnnie Construction. "We are looking forward to working more with the Southern Ute Tribe and the Range Division."

The fence is expected to be finished by September 1, but could be finished by early to mid-August.

Randy Baker and Southern Ute Tribal Chairman Clement J. Frost, pose for a picture with the headdress that was given back to the Tribe on Tuesday, June 8 in the Leonard C. Burch Building. The headdress was originally gifted to the Superintendent of Ignacio schools from Antonio Buck as a thank you for allowing Carl Baker, the first tribal member to enter into Ignacio public school system. Randy Baker is the son of Carl Baker.

HERITAGE & CULTURE

Headdress returns home

THE SOUTHERN UTE DRUM

A precious artifact made its way home to the Southern Ute Indian Reservation Tuesday, July 8. A headdress that was gifted to the Ignacio School Superintendent from 1937-1942 returned to the reservation Tuesday, July 8. The superintendent's daughter, Anne Hoffman, presented the headdress to Randy Baker and members of council.

Antonio Buck had given the headdress to the superintendent as a thank you for allowing the first tribal member into the Ignacio public school system. That tribal member was Carl Baker.

Randy Baker, son of Carl Baker, was present to view the headdress for the first time.

"It makes me and my family very humble," Baker said.

Alden Naranjo, NAG-PRA coordinator, unveiled the 70-year-old headdress. The headdress was not made of eagle feathers but rather feathers of a white turkey, Naranjo said.

According to Naranjo, it being made of turkey feathers isn't uncommon for the time it was gifted.

"In that particular time, no one was allowed to have eagle feathers, not even Native Americans," Naranjo said.

Southern Ute Chairman Clement Frost assured everyone that it not being made of eagle feathers doesn't take away from its significance.

"It was given as a thank you, our people would give away their favorite things to show appreciation," Frost said.

Frost accepted the headdress from Hoffman on behalf of the Tribe.

"It's where it belongs; it's from here and it belongs here," Hoffman said.

The headdress is in possession of the Tribe now and is expected to be on display in the near future.

Free assessment of tribal member water wells

By Curtis Hartenstine
SU ENVIRONMENTAL PROGRAMS

The Southern Ute Indian Tribe's Environmental Program Division provides a free assessment of tribal member water wells. The purpose of this evaluation is to ensure that Tribal members ingest water that is fit for human consumption. This service is offered to Southern Ute tribal members only and is limited to wells occurring within the exterior reservation boundaries. Although free, the assessment is done only after a well test request form is completed and accepted by the Tribe's Water Quality Program.

Testing involves collecting several samples of the well water that is assessed by contract laboratories for the presence of bacteria, methane and numerous other analytes that can be hazardous to human health. The most common contaminant found in well water within the reservation is bacteria although occasionally other contaminants, such as selenium, fluoride and arsenic, have been assessed from wells at concentrations exceeding recommendations for human consumption.

The presence of any concentration of bacteria is considered potentially dangerous. Methane, on the other hand, is an odorless, colorless gas and is highly volatile. Although not directly harmful to ingest, it can accumulate in close quarters when exposed to air, most often in bathrooms where it's released from toilets. As methane concentrations accumulate, it creates potentially explosive conditions. High levels of selenium are also a significant concern, especially in the Oxford area, where a Southern Ute family was severely poisoned by it in the 1960's.

When laboratory results are received the tribal member requesting the assessment is advised in writing of the results including any exceeding human health thresholds. The Water Quality Program does not attempt to rectify identified water quality issues nor does it specifically recommend remediation options. It does, however, in some instances refer the issue to Indian Health Services for their consideration.

It is not recommended that water well owners attempt to mitigate an identified water quality problem themselves. It is highly recommended a trained professional be contacted to safely remediate the issue.

Any Southern Ute tribal member having a drinking water well on their property within the reservation boundaries that they wish to be assessed should contact Kirk Lashmett, senior water quality specialist, with the Southern Ute Indian Tribe to request an evaluation. He can be reached at 970-563-0135, ext. 2218.

SU RISK MANAGEMENT

The First Annual Southern Ute Indian Tribe Permanent Fund National Safety Month (NSM) came to an end after one month and a week of fun filled safety information.

Provided material from the National Safety Council supplied educational material and resources on the following safety themes each week: Week one: Put an end to distracted driving; Week two: Be aware of your surroundings; Week three: Stop slips, trips and falls; Week four: Prevent prescription drug abuse; and Week five: Summer safety.

It was a successful month and effort to bring safety to the forefront of Tribal employee's minds. Subsequently, the Southern Ute Indian Tribe Risk Management Division recorded ZERO workman compensation claims for the whole month of June! However, NSM could not have been possible without the combined efforts and contributions from the following people:

- The Southern Ute Indian Tribe for allowing Risk Management to do NSM
- Kathi Gurule for her support and guidance
- Eddie Box Jr. and DNR GIS for doing the printing for the posters
- The Wildlife Division for the use of their laminating materials
- DNR for the use of their paper cutter
- Building Maintenance (Jeff Hopkins) for their help with setting up the display area
- The Southern Ute Indian Montessori Academy for their supplies
- The Purchasing Division for their supplies
- MIS (Garan Shaw) for the use of and help with the computer for the display

In order to ensure safe disposal when discarding medication, the Southern Ute Health Center and Southern Ute Police Department have made it easy for the public to dispose prescriptions when no longer needed. By Damon Toledo
THE SOUTHERN UTE DRUM

Every language has its roots, and every root is grounded by history. Preserving the language and traditions allows the history to grow, and once the attention of continuing the traditions diverts, the history is drenched to the ground from once it stood Preserving history and traditions was the main topic discussed during the meeting of International Society of Weekly Newspaper Editors (ISWNE) on Saturday, June 28. Editors from all over the nation gathered at the Southern Ute Cultural Center and Museum seeking information surrounding the influences of native culture.

Topics at the meeting included education development within the tribe, the establishments of tribal government, even the topic about the Washington Redskins name. Chairman Clement J. Frost spoke about the importance of keeping Ute culture alive, followed by the presentation of an educational iPhone application developed by tribal elder, Lynda Grove D'Wolf.

The application titled Kavia Nuccie Nú-u-ápá ga-pi is a downloadable program that allows users to learn words of the Ute language through a presentation of illustrations and sounds. It is Grove D'Wolf's intention to reach out to tribal members to study the language and keep the tradition at its roots. Grove D'Wolf addressed to the assembly with concern, "I don't want our language to die. We are such a small tribe, and we need to bring the lan-

His role is to provide consultation and support services to Native member organizations, increase dynamic programs and outcomes, and ensure stronger Club staff with depth of leadership. Child safety was the number one topic, focusing on subjects like making sure Club staff are supervising the children at any given time while building a stronger relationship between the Club and community.

The Boys & Girls club said their goodbyes to program aide and Navy recruit, Austin Haire from Ignacio. He has been a program aide since the beginning of the summer, and has been recently selected to serve with the Merchant Marines Academy for a service of five years. The club gathered at the SunUte Park on Friday, June 27, to give their respects. Group leaders provided cupcakes as treats for the kids.

Haire, 19-years-old, will begin his service in Kingspoint, NY, the location of the Merchant Marines Academy. Throughout his years, he will journey out to lands across the world. The Academy is one of five federal service academies in the United States. His favorite club activities included spending time fishing at Lake Capote, playing volleyball, and being there for the kids. Haire hopes to travel to South America during his service. Club members were served tasty cupcakes as the kids said their farewells to Haire with hugs and thanks.

- Receiving your GED credential better prepares you for entering college.

Ashley wanted to earn her GED® credential not just for herself, but to show her daughter the importance of education. Currently a medical assistant, she loves working in the medical field and wanted to further her career. She depended on the online resources and study books she purchased - as well as her positive mindset - to help her pass the test. Now that she's earned her GED® credential, she plans to go to college and realize her dream of becoming a physician's assistant. Ashley encourages others to go for their dreams, too. "Anybody can succeed if they put their mind to it!" If you have any questions or need help, call the Adult Education Center and talk with Dr. Jonathan Hunstiger (Adult Education Program Manager) at 970-563- 0237.

Sacha Smith/SU Drum

Growth Fund Operating Director, Bob Zahradnik describes the Delta House FPS structure to Councilman Howard D. Richards Sr., at the Delta House christening event Wednesday, July 9 in Ingleside, Texas.

first full year of production – Delta House is forecasted to contribute 42 percent of Red Willow's total earnings before interest, tax, depreciation and amortization (EBITDA) and 34 percent of the Growth Fund's total EBITDA.

The 296-foot structure will be installed in the Mississippi Canyon of the North-central Gulf of Mexico as soon as the end of July, Zahradnik said.

"With good weather it will be out there by the end of July, but they need about 10 days of good weather to install it," he said.

If the weather doesn't look promising Delta House will be held back and towed out after hurricane season.

There are a total of five wells drilled to date with plans of about 15 wells being drilled.

The Delta House FPS will not drill the wells, as a separate offshore drilling rig will do the drilling. The FPS' job is to receive the raw production from the wells, and separate the crude oil and natural gas that will flow into the export lines.

Once installed, Delta House will have 80,000 barrels of oil flowing through it per day, with a peak of 100,000 barrels, Zahradnik said.

First production from Delta House is forecasted for April 2015.

"If we get [Delta House] out there by the end of July that'll be sooner," Zahradnik said.

ican radio stations operating in the United States. The original Board of Directors of KSUT consisted Leonard C. Burch, Eddie Box Sr., Chris A. Baker, Thelma Kuebler, Erwin Taylor, and John Baker.

It has been KSUT's intention to unify local communities as it transcended to cultural and socioeconomic boundaries.

"It was my father's vision to let tribal members know what was happening in the government," said Box Jr. "That was very important. We were doing what he wanted, and we were all in agreement with his [intentions]."

Grounded by strong support from its Board of Directors and staff, the station expanded its broadcasting service in 1979 to neighboring communities after the relocation of a new transmitter. It wasn't until 1984 when KSUT became a National Public Radio affiliate. This allowed the station to expand its listenership, which improved the numbers of tribal and non-tribal listeners.

In 1998, a second stream was added to KSUT's transmitter, which soon established Four Corners Public Radio. This allowed KSUT to expand its large mix of music genres and programs to a larger regional audience while Southern Ute Tribal Radio focused on the original KSUT mission of delivering Native-focused news, music, and information to tribal members. Shows featured on both Four Corners Public Radio and Southern Ute Tribal Radio includes: Morning Edition, TED Radio Hour, Rez-olution Radio, and American Indian Living among a number of others.

Erwin Taylor commented on the positive outcomes of expanding communication on the reservation.

"We have to bring our communities closer so we can grow," he said. "New ideas come every day. The sky is the limit – there is no looking back. This is the future of the youth... They must take with them the tradition of the elders and must know to protect their lands, culture, and sovereignty."

Bayfield celebrates July Fourth with a bang

Members of the American Legion Post 143 of Bayfield and VFW Post 4031 of Durango led the parade and carried the colors. The parade kicked off with a fly-over by a helicopter.

As said by Smokey Bear, "only you can prevent forest fires," a bit of valuable advice, especially this time of the year. Smokey Bear rode atop a U.S. Forest Service unit during the parade.

Independence Day was celebrated in Bayfield during their annual 4th of July Celebration, hosting a parade and festivities. Floats, horses, waving politicians, service providers and even a pet parade made their way down Mill Street, as well as plenty of food, fun, arts & crafts and entertainment in Joe Stephenson Park which concluded with a fireworks display.

Squeegee Monkey Window Washing of Durango, handed out bananas to young and old alike, with a help from a couple friends, a gorilla and an orangutan.

"May the fourth be with you," Bobo Fett was flanked by two storm troopers as they made their way down Mill Street, to the delight of many Star Wars fans, even taking the time to pose for photos afterwards.

Proudly carrying the stars and stripes atop his trusted steed, in full military uniform, this man garnered many smiles and even a few salutes during the patriot themed parade in Bayfield.

COLORADO BASEBALL

Coloradan's career revived through 'Miracle'

Coal Creek-er aided famed 1914 Braves

Special to the Drum
JOEL PRIEST

Fourth of July, 1914, festivities in Boston were probably somewhat quieted by the Brooklyn Robins' 7-5, 4-3 sweep of a National League doubleheader at the South End Grounds.

Two days later – and just three before a young George Herman Ruth was purchased from the minor-league Baltimore Orioles by the Braves' in-town AL counterparts, the Red Sox (already with Ouray, Colo.-raised flame-thrower 'Smoky Joe' Wood) – the less-ballyhooed Beantown boys avenged themselves on the same field by returning the favor, 3 to 1 and 1 to 0.

And though the second victory only boosted Boston back to an even 19-19 at home (and 28-40 overall), the successful showings were the start of what would become what still endures as Major League Baseball's most incredible midseason reversal of fortune.

Going from worst to first in just two months, the Braves – who'd finished fifth in the NL in 1913 at 69-82 – became the first team to win a pennant after trailing the pack on the Nation's Birthday, and a fellow from Fremont County, Colorado, helped finish off the wild ride.

The unlikely postseason contenders' record over their final 85 games – including a 7-0 no-hitter by George 'Iron' Davis against the Philadelphia Phillies on Sept. 9, the day after Boston gained the driver's seat for good – was 66-19 for a winning percentage of .776.

And after capturing the NL flag going away – by 10.5 games over the runner-up New York Giants, and 13 over the third-place St. Louis Cardinals – there would be no slowdown in the Fall Classic.

Cementing their legacy as the "Miracle Braves," manager George Stallings' side went on to stun legendary Connie Mack's heavily-favored Philadelphia Athletics in four games – the first such 'sweep,' with Gowdy (who would actually have three stints with the Braves) hitting the only homer – in the 1914 World Series, finished inside the Sox's Fenway Park rather than the smaller Grounds.

Which wasn't a problematic shift of scenery for Thomas L. Hughes; brought back up into the bigs late in the season after building a 17-9 record in 262.2 innings of his fourth year with courtesy Bill 'The Baseball Undertaker'/findagrave.com

The final resting place in Glendale, Calif., of Colorado-born-and-raised "Salida Tom" Hughes.

Double-A Rochester (N.Y.), the Coal Creek, Colo., native saw his first major-league action since 1910 in two starts and re-presented the promise with which he'd originally made believers out of the New York Highlanders [now the Yankees] in 1906.

Hughes, in fact, clinched the flag for the Braves by winning the first game he pitched since his Sept. 5 acquisition, edging Chicago 3 to 2 at Fenway on Sept. 29, but his longest-lasting impact came during the two years following the final out of the Braves' 3-1 defeat of the A's in the Series' Game 4.

Born January 28, 1884 [not even two years after Coal Creek's incorporation as a town], to parents originally hailing from Wales in the United Kingdom, Hughes' career began back in 1904 in the Class C Missouri Valley League with the Pittsburg (Kan.) Coal Diggers, and also the Topeka (Kan.) Saints.

The Salida High School grad's up-and-down professional road would also include minor-league stops in Atlanta (Ga.), Montreal, Quebec, and Newark, N.J., before reaching Rochester after his second unspectacular two-year [1906-07, 1909-10] stretch with the Highlanders.

His first pair in the majors' 'Senior Circuit,' however, was of the lightning-in-a-bottle sort.

In 1915 he led the NL in appearances (50), saves (9; calculated in retrospect) and games finished (22) – all the while going 16-14 as a starter, with career-bests 280.1 innings and 171 K's – and then led the loop in winning percentage (16-3; .842) in 1916.

With Walt Tragesser behind the plate, Hughes threw the Braves' first no-hitter after Davis' on June 16 of that year, blanking Pittsburgh 2-0 and getting Pirate superstar Honus Wagner for the final out.

Still the Braves' career leader in fewest hits allowed per nine innings (6.77), "Salida Tom" last toed major-league rubber on July 17, 1918, and exited the bigs with a 56-39 record in 160 appearances spread out during nine campaigns. He started 87 games, and saw to the finish 55 with nine shutouts.

Also credited with closing 59 contests, Hughes fanned 476 batters, walked just 235 (and plunked 31), and gave up 703 hits in 863 total innings. Tagged for just 245 earned runs, his era was a sturdy 2.56.

Prior to pitching cars in Los Angeles, after also working the insurance business and then helping with aircraft assembly during WWII, baseball allowed Hughes to again hang on in the minors until he finally hung up his spikes for good in 1925, after having played in the Double-A Pacific Coast League for the Sacramento and L.A. clubs since 1920.

Six years after his only offspring, son Thomas, Jr., was killed in a car accident, Hughes, Sr., passed away in L.A. on Nov. 1, 1961 – five days before Golden, Colo.-bred Roy Hartzell, who joined the Highlanders in 1911 – at age 77 and was buried in nearby Glendale's Forest Lawn Memorial Park.

ADDITIONALLY

Having spent a serious 1912 with the Single-A Western League's Denver Grizzlies, in which he went 22-9 with a 2.50 ERA and an eye-popping 326 K's—helping the Grizzlies to a 99-63 record and a 4-1 postseason series defeat of Double-A American Association rulers Minneapolis – Leonard set (and still holds) MLB's single-season record-low ERA, with an 0.96 achieved in ... yes ... 1914.

Leonard's sudden explosion in the Mile High City came in his first pro season; he'd previously played (and studied) collegiately at Moraga, Calif.-based St. Mary's from 1910-11.

A letter from the McClanahan Family

We, the McClanahan family, wish to thank residents of Ignacio and our surrounding community for your support during the recent announcement that Fenn Foods is terminating operations of the Shur Valu grocery store. Fenn Foods has been operating Ignacio Shur Valu for 12 years from Roswell, NM. They suddenly decided to not remain open through the remaining 17 months of their lease.

We know how important a good grocery store is in Ignacio, so we plan to get that back. We are moving forward as quickly as we can to remove the old Shur Valu building and build a new grocery store right in the same location. We are partnering up with Ezra and Brook Lee to get this done. They will be operating the new business. They will still be using Affiliated Foods as their supplier so they will continue to have those great weekly sales. We are excited to announce that new services like a pharmacy will be added. We are equally excited about seeing a renewed emphasis on fresh, locally grown meat returning to the meat case, and the opportunity to purchase custom cut quarters and halves of beef. You'll also see an enlarged bakery, produce department, grocery selection, health and beauty and dry products. With it being locally owned and operated, we feel confident that they will provide great customer service like Butch McClanahan used to when he was walking the aisles.

The Center Point building with Wells Liquor South and KD's Caffe' Latte' will remain open during all the construction and transition. We are looking at spring of 2015 as a grand opening time. We appreciate your patience, and regret that it will be an inconvenience during this time. We also appreciate SUCAP offering shuttle services to Bayfield for those who need assistance. We appreciate the support the Town of Ignacio is giving us. We also appreciate Roots, 7 to 11, and the Thriftway for stepping up to provide more grocery needs for this great community.

Thank you again and we look forward to bigger and better things in the spring when we can provide a much better service and an improved overall shopping experience.

FLY-FISHING

A dynamic duo, every fly-fisherman should have one

By Don Oliver
SPECIAL TO THE DRUM

A long, long time ago there was a television show that featured a dynamic duo (DD), known as Batman and Robin. For those of you that don't remember T.V. in black and white you probably have no recollection of this show. However, all of us old folks remember a dumb and funny show. We also remember the DD always worked together, fighting crime and always coming away victorious.

For fly-fishing, I believe everyone should have a DD. To be more precise, you need one wet fly and one dry fly that you can always turn to when nothing else seems to work.

If you're like me the number of distinct fly patterns in your boxes easily comes to 50. Add in salt and warm water patterns and that number will most assuredly tally three digits.

With those kinds of numbers it is easy to understand why a fly-fisherman can spend hours changing flies searching for just the right pattern. Your DD should be patterns that can be used in both moving and still water. They should be two flies you have confidence in, and never hesitate to use. They should be the flies you would use if money was on the line, or you needed to feed your family.

For me, my DD is comprised of one fly designed by Lee Wulff and the other by Russell Blessing. They are a Royal Wulff and a Wooly

For fly-fishing, I believe everyone should have a DD. To be more precise, you need one wet fly and one dry fly that you can always turn to when nothing else seems to work.

Bugger.

By design the Royal Wulff is one color scheme, while the Wooly Bugger comes in a multitude of colors. My favorite color for the Wooly Bugger is green. Why do I like these two? I believe they resemble nothing in particular and everything in general. Also, I can see a Royal Wulff, even a size-18. More importantly, one or the other always seems to come away victorious.

As a test of my theory I suggest you tell your significant other that you are going to conduct a very important scientific experiment that will take at least two days on the water.

On the first day take your entire collection of cold-water flies, except your DD, and go fly-fishing. Keep count of the number of fish you catch.

The next day take only your DD. At the end of the second day compare the number of fish you raised. If it is a tie, repeat the experiment. Since this is for science you should have no trouble getting permission to do the test several times to verify your results.

I have had trout and small mouth bass take the Royal Wulff, and had trout, bass, pike, carp, and pan-fish take the Wooly Bugger. I think you'll be surprised how well your DD works. Now, do the same thing with your warm- and salt-water flies.

This, of course, means fly-fishing in places other than Durango. There are terrific lakes in Texas and Oklahoma for the warm water test. Anywhere along the Gulf Coast, Bahamas, or Belize will offer you endless days to come up with a DD for saltwater.

Give this experiment a try. I think you'll have lots of fun, and be pleasantly surprised with the results. Once you put your action plan into effect, let me know how you pulled off going to all those places. I would love to try some new reasons to convince my significant other of why I need to travel.

PET HEALTH

Keep your pet safe during the summer

By Loren Jones
SU NATURAL RESOURCES
ENFORCEMENT

It's that time of year again. The weather is hot and people are spending more time outside. This raises additional issues for people with animals. Here are a few things to keep in mind when you are traveling with, or even just keeping animals outside in these temperatures.

When you are leaving your animals outdoors make sure they have shelter. Not just dogs and cats, but livestock also. They need a place to get out of the summer sun and cool down.

Many breeds of domestic animals are prone to sunburns the same as their human counterparts. Should we get the rains that we need so desperately, shelter is also important for the health and safety of your animals.

Make sure that your animals always have access to fresh water. It is essential that they are not forced to stay in this hot weather where they can dehydrate quickly. Many of our animal companions cannot sweat to lower their body temperature. Dogs are forced to pant to cool by evaporative cooling. This also uses a lot of water in warm weather.

One of the most common issues that occur at this time of year is caused when traveling with pets. No animal should ever be locked in a vehicle in summer months. Temperatures rise inside the vehicle very fast and can rapidly cause severe health problems or even death.

Studies have shown that average temperatures in a parked car rise by 22 degrees in only three minutes. The dash and steering wheel quickly climb to 192 degrees. To put this in perspective, that is hot enough to grill a chicken or cook a hamburger.

While many of these tips are often looked at as common sense, there are numerous problems every year with people not doing these simple things. While many of these issues cause severe consequences for the animal, many can also result in fines and citations. The Southern Ute Indian Tribe takes animal welfare very seriously.
